Extracted from "Pioneer Life on the Bay of Quinte":

"Prominent among the descendants is George CURRIE, Police Magistrate, the well-known citizen of Picton, who has made his way in life by his own ability, and has won a substantial success. Reared on his father's farm, he took part in the pioneering work and arduous toil inseparable from the bush, and his first education was obtained at the country school near at hand, conducted by an old-time Irish schoolmaster. He finished by taking a course in the Picton Grammar School during two or three winters, and, in summers, working as usual at home. At the age of sixteen he entered into an apprenticeship with the business house of David B. STEVENSON, of Picton, which, at that time, was the largest general store in the county. Here he served four years, performing the multifarious duties peculiar to a business which combined a stock that supplied nearly every want, and, among the other duties allotted to him, were those of looking after Mr. STEVENSON's office in connection with his position as Chief Magistrate, and acting as his legal clerk when occasion required. At the end of his apprenticeship, he decided to enter upon business for himself, and his first undertaking was in the way of a foundry in Picton, which he conducted successfully for five years, and in which he was noted for the manufacture of the agricultural implements of that period.

"He next embarked in the business of dry goods and general merchandise, at which he continued with unbroken success for twenty years.

"He then established a ship yard, and carried this on for several years with the same success as his former business. During this time, he was always prominently in the forefront as a citizen interested in the welfare of the town and country, and represented the county at one time or another in every office, from councillor to reeve, as well as being warden for one term.

"For the past eighteen years, Mr. Currie has retired from all active business; but during that period he has held the high and responsible position of Police Magistrate for Picton, which office he still occupies and adorns."
