The Osborne Family

The Osbornes are of English stock who had their abode in that part of England which borders on Wales, from which part of the United Kingdom they emigrated about a hundred years prior to the disturbances between Britain and the colonies, culminating in the revolution of 1776. They came to New York State and had improved their material opportunities during a century of residence to such an extent that the father of Richard Osborne was, at the close of the war, considered one of the wealthy loyalists whom the Argus-eyed Republic selected as a man to whom especial attention should be paid in way of reprisal. The Osbornes were sufficiently indoctrinated with loyal principles and addicted to loyal practices to bring about their expulsion from the boundaries of the Republic.

It was in 1786, when Richard Osborne was sixteen years of age, and his father already an old man, that they were compelled to forego the acquirement of many years and accept the bounty of a paternal government which could utilize their powers of development and accumulation in that part of the continent, which it still retained. Richard's father, having contrived to save some stock and money out of the general overthrow, found his way to Adolphustown. In consideration of the large loss sustained by him, he had been granted six hundred acres of the best land in Sophiasburgh. Proceeding by way of Picton, he went along the high shore and made his choice of land in the district about a mile west of the holding now occupied by Austin VanDusen, where he and his son were then first white settlers to put in an appearance. This large tract of land was then a wilderness. Especially hard it must have been for a mere youth of sixteen, whose father certainly stood by his side, but with energies nearly spent, to contemplate the prospect before him. But whether alone or associated with his father, Richard Osborne cannot have faltered, for there he lived and labored for forty years, became a leading citizen of the district and was esteemed as one of the foremost men of the country until his death in 1852, in his eighty-fourth year.

In 1812 he had to lay aside the ploughshare for the sword, and in the War of Defence was many times in action. During the progress of the war his house at Pleasant Bay was a rendezvous of the British officers while they were engaged in watching and directing the operations of their respective commands. For services of a useful character, like the one just mentioned, and others fraught with more immediate personal danger, the Osbornes were again brought under the notice of British authorities; and for services rendered in 1812 they received a further grant of two hundred acres. It was while living on this farm, lots 92 and 93, 4th concession of Ameliasburgh, and which had been given by the Pioneer to his only son, John T. Osborne, that he met his death. One day in assisting his grandson with the cattle, a bull of the herd turned on the old man and crushed him against one of the outbuildings with such violence as to cause his death. He had married Sarah Trumpour, the daughter of a United Empire Loyalist, who had died thirty years before in her fiftieth year.

Besides John T., the Pioneer left seven daughters, two of whom married into the Roblin family, and a third into the Foster family. He mainly divided his Green Point property among these daughters, when, shortly before his death, he went to live with his son, John T.

John T. Osborne married Sarah Greeley, who was a first cousin of Horace Greeley, the eminent journalist. Her father, Jonathan Greeley, was one of the three Greeley brothers, who settled respectively in Vermont, Ohio and Upper Canada; and it was Jonathan, who, as a civil engineer, did most of the early Government surveying in Prince Edward County. John T. was born in 1809; he was an enthusiast in military affairs and was out in the Mackenzie rebellion. He was a Justice of the Peace, and served his township in other public capacities. His son, Richard J., took part in the Fenian Raid. He had been first engaged in farming, then for some years in mercantile business in Consecon, after which he took up farming again. He was also well known as a leading commercial traveller in the district. His brother, Jonathan, was a lieutenant of the Prince Edward company of militia at Kingston at the time of the Fenian Raid, and Edward, another brother, was captain of a company at Sarnie; both saw active service.

The Pioneer had several brothers, James or Jacobus Osborne, settled at Bethel, Sophiasburgh, and married Tremis, daughter of Horatio Trumpour. Their daughter, Elizabeth Osborne, married Henry Rightmyer; a son, John Osborne, is still living, aged over eight years, at Hallowell Mills. Nehemiah Osborne married Deborah Trumpour, and Nathaniel married Sarah Campbell.
